

Gathering up the threads

STORIES AND REFLECTIONS
FROM A HOSPITAL CHAPLAIN

The death system is one of the many complex adaptive systems that exist and intersect throughout societies

3 things I have learned from the weaving of the threads

Non- medical networks of support are often the most important to the patient or family member.

Being on the outside gives me the best place to see their own support networks.

I need to trust the rest of that person's network and step back.
